Here's a rewritten version of the text: Squid turned to Stanley with an unusual request: "Can you do me a favor?" Stanley hesitated before agreeing, and Squid began to explain what he needed. He asked Ms. Morengo for a pen and paper, then scribbled down a phone number on it. With shaking hands, he handed the paper to Stanley, instructing him to call his mom and convey a message: "Tell her I said sorry... Tell her Alan said sorry." This simple act would set in motion a chain of events that could put Stanley's life at risk. As he contemplated this reality, Stanley realized that becoming an outlaw meant living on the run, always looking over his shoulder for the authorities. His only hope was to create a new identity, erasing his past and starting anew. She swiped a stagecoach carrying the first Stanley Yelnats. Stole his suitcase full of valuable bonds and promissory notes, which she buried in Green Lake (which was now a ghost town). Trout Walker came for her treasure twenty years after Sam's death, but she died laughing after refusing to tell him where she buried the first Stanley's suitcase. In the present day, Zero survived in the desert by eating canned spiced peaches that had lasted over 100 years from Sam's boat on the dried-up lake. "Start diggin', Trout." —Katherine Barlow’s last words before her death. Kate Barlow, a stunning young woman with an average height and slim figure, was known for her beauty and cunning nature. As an outlaw, she robbed numerous banks in Texas and even stole from Stanley Yelnats IV's ancestor, Stanley Yelnats I, without killing him. Instead, she left him to die in the desert. Kate's thieving ways made her incredibly wealthy, which she then buried somewhere at present-day Camp Green Lake. Kate's physical appearance was striking, with cream skin, blue eyes, and a button nose. She had small pink lips, snaggle teeth, and long blonde hair that changed styles depending on whether she was a teacher or an outlaw. Kate eventually returned to the lake and sat against Sam's boat, Mary Lou. However, her peaceful moment was disrupted by Charles "Trout" Walker and Linda Walker, who threatened to kill her. Kate calmly told Trout to go ahead and kill her, but warned him that he would spend the next hundred years digging for something he would never find. As she spoke, a yellow-spotted lizard darted out from the boat and bit Kate on the arm. She died at the age of 42, laughing softly as she bid Trout and Linda farewell. Zeroni warned Kate that if she forgot to come back for Madame Zeroni, her family would be cursed forever. Meanwhile, Trout Walker appeared, threatening Kate unless she revealed where she had hidden the loot. Kissin' Kate Barlow, however, didn't give in to his demands and instead revealed a surprising connection to Linda Miller, who was now Linda Walker. The revelation led to a tense standoff between Trout and Kate. In a separate scene, Mr. Pendanski asked Stanley about the person responsible for his predicament. Stanley responded that it was him, Stanley Yelnats IV, due to a family tradition of naming sons after themselves in reverse order. Magnet then shared a humorous anecdote about a stolen dog whose pocket started barking. As the narrative unfolded, Squid and X-Ray discussed the possibility of a 40-day and 40-night rainfall event similar to the biblical account. This led to an exchange about building an ark with two of every animal species. The Warden Walker showcased her homemade nail polish, which contained rattlesnake venom as its secret ingredient. Zig-Zag broke into song, singing about digging holes with broken hands and withered souls. Magnet speculated that Stanley might have found Zero, who could still be alive. X-Ray joked about the Easter Bunny and Tooth Fairy also still being around, while Squid wondered about their fate. Stop drinking and my dad'll come back. Someone mentioned a truck being stolen by Caveman. It was awesome. The lake stretches for miles; your kids, grandkids, and great-grandkids will dig for a hundred years without finding it. A lizard bit someone, causing them to laugh softly before dying. The Warden Walker said he's surrounded by cow poop. Someone else agreed that it smells like puke from an asparagus-fed mule. Mr. Sir explained their camp's philosophy: turning bad boys into good ones through hole-digging. Someone asked about the color of the blood, but Stanley didn't know or couldn't tell. Zig-Zag wished he'd seen it happen. Magnet pointed out that if Mr. Sir hadn't shot something, Stanley would be digging a hole. The group discussed lizards and their unique characteristics, like having exactly 11 spots. Squid noted that getting too close to count them would mean you're dead. Armpit mentioned seeing 10 lizards in one hole yesterday. X-Ray said they're digging for character-building purposes. Mr. Sir claimed there's nothing at the bottom; they should have found it by now. Mr. Pendanski disagreed, and someone else joked about not telling the queen bee. The Warden Walker became upset when Armpit tried to fool her into thinking he'd found something, but it was just a broken TV nob. Armpit's attempt at humor led to him losing shower privileges for a week. Someone mentioned how someone knew Stanley's name. Zig-Zag revealed that the camp is wired with cameras and microphones everywhere, including the showers. Stanley corrected that there are no cameras in the showers. Squid mentioned reading Stanley's file, which said he suffers from acute paranoia. Magnet wondered if this meant being watched every day. Yeah they did. Stanley's Mother expresses sympathy for the homeless old lady living in a shoe, implying it smelled bad. Stanley is relieved that Hector stole shoes and put them on his head. He feels awkward when Zero reads over his shoulder. Zero cannot read. Magnet warns everyone not to mess with Caveman. X-Ray asks if they saw Caveman earlier. Stanley doesn't want to confront anyone. Zig-Zag tells Caveman to come on. Stanley is confused, asking "I'm Caveman?" Zero praises being better than Barfbag. Stanley thinks about Mary Lou in a bikini. Judge warns Stanley of possible jail time. Judge informs Stanley that he has two options: Camp Green Lake or jail. Stanley has never been to camp before. Judge sentences Stanley for stealing shoes. Squid asks if shoes were taken from someone's feet. Zig-Zag accuses Hector of killing the person and covering it up. Twitch talks about his love for fast cars. Magnet warns Twitch not to touch the Jaguar. Madame Zeroni encourages Stanley to go to America, suggesting better opportunities.
